

My interview with Lucas

By Rayan Bou-Hamdan

Lucas was born in Poland in 1992. Lucas has lived most of his life in Poland. His father decided to move to Sweden to find a job. Because the circumstances in Poland weren't good, he had a hard time to find a job and then the jobs there weren't well paid. So his father moved to Sweden to find a job to be able to support his family.

So when his father moved to Sweden he found a job and realised that he and his family will have a better future here. Then he told his family to move to Sweden. So Lucas and his family took the plane to Sweden, he came with his mom and siblings. Lucas moved to Sweden when he was 15 years old so now he have been here a year.

He loved Poland more than Sweden because when he came here he felt very alone. In Poland he had many friends he could hang out with. Now he miss them and it's hard for him to leave a country he has lived in for 15 years. But the language for him is no problem because he has learned good Swedish so he will be fine if someone talks to him, he has a good understanding.

The only problem for Lucas is that he doesn't really feel that he fits in the Swedish society. Because he doesn't have friends that are from Sweden. But besides that he thinks Sweden is a very good country. Because he loves the life style here and the people. But even though he still misses his home country.

Lucas hasn't really decide what he want to become in the future. He has not a dream job. His plans now are to study because he want to have as much knowledge as possible. He is interested in school but his favourite sport is basketball and then he loves girls. The only thing he wants to be better at is basketball and the Swedish language.

Lucas chose Lövströms gymnasium because his brother went to this school before him and he recommended the school.

When me and two of my classmates interviewed Lucas we were curios to hear his answers. Because most people who come to Sweden don't feel like they fit in or don't stay long. It's hard to get permission to stay. But Lucas hasn't got the answer yet, if he will be allowed to stay or not. I think that it was a great part of the project because many people on Europe don't have the same opportunities, and it's a big difference between the countries in Europe. Like Lucas' family they didn't see a good future in Poland. They had problems with their economy and it was hard to find a job that was well paid, not enough to support a family. So they were forced to move. So I think that those kinds of problems shouldn't exist today in Europe. Most people who live in Europe who move around to other countries in Europe do that because of society problems, for example racism and because they feel excluded
